From Sick Shelter Dog to Pampered Pet

Illness is a common theme in animal shelters across the country. Airborne illnesses, such as kennel cough, spread rapidly in these small, overcrowded spaces. Unfortunately, shelters often lack the necessary resources to treat sick animals.

To make matters worse, shelters are the worst place for a sick dog. Most of these dogs have had their entire lives uprooted. They were either lost or abandoned by their owners. They are scared, confused, and lonely. And now they don't feel well. They don't get the vet care they desperately need. They don't get the love and attention they crave. And so they get worse.

Brinx was one of these dogs. On a trip to the Ashtabula County Animal Protective League in Ohio, Buffalo Pug found Brinx underweight and severely ill. He had been in and out of the shelter several times due to a neglectful owner. It was here that he developed kennel cough. He refused to eat and his condition was going rapidly downhill.

Ashtabula, being a no-kill shelter, can have upwards of 200 dogs to care for at any given time. Their time and resources are stretched thin. While they did what they could for Brinx, it was clear he was only getting worse.

While Brinx may not be your typical small breed, Buffalo Pug stepped up and brought him to safety, along with 5 other dogs, another of which also required expensive medical care. They shared Brinx's story and through the power of social media, Brinx's foster mom, Crystal, saw him and stepped up to bring him into her home. Unknown to Brinx, his life was about to change.

Upon arriving in Buffalo, Brinx was taken to Millersport Small Animal Clinic. He was given medication not only for kennel cough, but for an ear infection as well as an infection on his right front foot. Weighing in at only 71 pounds, it was also visually apparent that he needed lots of extra meals. Armed with medication and instructions, Crystal took him home where he would be able to recover.

But it wasn't that easy. Brinx continued to get worse. He had never-ending discharge coming from his nose. He was too weak to do anything other than lay on the floor. While he was finally eating, he would only eat cooked meat, a difficult feat for his vegetarian foster mom.

After continuing to get worse, he was taken back to Millersport where he received fluids and additional care. After staying for a few days, he was finally released. But soon after, he started sneezing blood. Another trip back to Millersport, this time for a more costly after-hours emergency visit. X-rays were done and it was determined Brinx had pneumonia. He was put on different medication and sent home.

As they say, the third time is the charm. With these new meds, Brinx finally started to recover. He was finally getting the medicine, nourishment, love, and attention he needed to get better. He started eating kibble again, 6 cups a day of it, and was slowly getting his energy back.

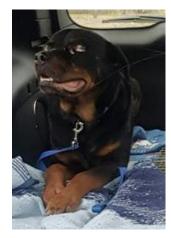

Today, Brinx is a healthy 105 pounds. He was recently adopted. He has settled right in and is loving his new life. While he has a dad all to himself, he gets to see his foster mom and foster siblings regularly. He loves going for walks twice a day and playing with his toys. His dad says his training is going well, he wants to listen and please. They are working on sit/stay for feeding and putting on his leash.

This is what rescue is all about. Buffalo Pug has amazing resources all over the area. Volunteers are always willing to step up at a moment's notice to help dogs like Brinx. Amazing vets like Millersport Small Animal Clinic provide substantial discounts that allow Buffalo Pug to continue to save these dogs.

But nothing in life is free and these medical expenses add up very quickly. Buffalo Pug has had more medical cases in the last year than ever before. On top of this, there are often more than 30 dogs in foster care, needing vaccinations, flea and heartworm preventatives, and spay/neuter operations. The medical fund is dangerously low, which means without additional support, Buffalo Pug may need to turn away dogs in need.

Please consider donating so that we can continue our mission. Donations can be made at the adoption center or through PayPal. See the last page of this newsletter for more information. Donations over $50 are also accepted directly through Millersport Small Animal Clinic.

Featured Dog: Billy

Breed: Chinese Crested / Xolo Mexican Hairless

Gender: Male
Age: 8 Years
Weight: 12 lbs

Arrived: August 2014

Billy is one of our medical needs dogs. Upon arriving, it was immediately apparent that something was wrong—he was dragging his back legs and could barely walk. After many trips to the vet, a visit to Cornell, and an MRI, it was determined that Billy has an inoperable herniated disc.

Billy is now on medication that has helped him tremendously. He has some restrictions (no jumping,), but he no longer drags his feet and can get around just fine. He can even run around—a huge change from a dog that could barely walk! Due to his injury, he does have some incontinence issues, but a belly band and a few paper towels solve that problem. It's a small price to pay for him to live a happy life.

Billy absolutely loves people. He will follow his person wherever they go. He loves to be on your lap. He always wants to please. While he is being fostered with other small dogs, and could be adopted into the right small or docile pack, he would be equally happy with a family all to himself.

Don't let Billy's age or medical issues get in your way—he certainly doesn't! Billy's medication costs less than $50 a month and allows him to live a relatively normal life with little other intervention. A fluffy bed, a T-shirt in the summer and a jacket in the winter, and he is ready to go. He still has many years left in him and would love a forever family of his own.

Foster Spotlight Amie Burnett

Location: Corning

Fostering: 5 years

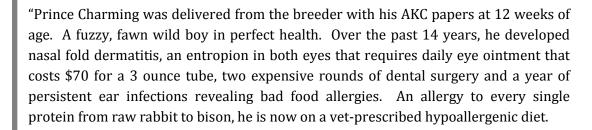

"In November 2011, I became a foster mom for the first time to a blind Pug named Ping Pong. Since then, each and every one of my fosters have taught me more about myself than I ever expected anything or anyone could. I've learned a new level of patience. I've witnessed unconditional love can do for broken hearts and empty souls. I've witnessed the effects of neglect and abuse first hand. I have felt both accomplished and defeated—and sometimes at the very same time. I've shown mercy and have held an ailing body as it left this earth. There are sleepless nights and days spent traveling to and from veterinary appointments and home visits. I've conquered skin issues and have trained some of the most seemingly impossible cases. I've saved lives. I've changed lives. I've screamed. I've laughed. I've cried.

Through this journey, I have met some of my now closest friends—my rescue family. Every day I am thankful for my adoptive parents and could not continue on without their support. Most of all, I am grateful that I have a partner who welcomes each and every one of our fosters with open arms. He is my rock and I couldn't be a successful foster without him. If there's anything I've learned, it is that some days are incredibly more difficult than others, but in the end it is ALWAYS worth it. So, to all of my fosters, I thank you. Without you, I wouldn't have found myself or my true passion in RESCUE."

Success Stories: A Tale of Two Pugs

Rescues, shelters, breeders, pet stores, online. There are so many places where a family can find a new furry friend, some options better than others. Many people believe that by purchasing a puppy from a breeder, they are getting a "better," healthier dog. But the truth is, any dog, whether they are young or old, purebred or mix breed, small or large, has the potential to develop medical issues. It takes a special person to adopt a medical needs dog, but the reward and love you get from that dog can never be replaced.

Boba was found on Craigslist in very poor condition. He was taken in by Buffalo Pug, skin issues and all, in October 2014. This is what his adoptive mom had to say about Boba and his brother, Prince Charming:

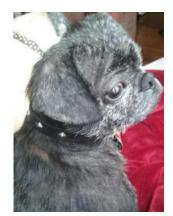

When Charm was 13, we adopted Boba from Buffalo Pug and Small Breed Rescue who was probably 5 or 6, covered with crusty, weeping sores and missing patches of coarse, wiry fur. He itched, scratched and shook near constantly. Underweight and probably left outside in neglect, he started to do much better in foster care. He visited the vet who was perplexed about his extensive skin condition, all blood and stool tests were normal. He went onto a raw diet, and his skin issues persisted. The happiest, most cuddly of pugs, he settled into his new home rather gleefully. After a dental procedure, he saw the holistic vet who really helped get his skin issues straightened out. Diet allergies, just like Charm.

A year and a half later, Boba is still doing very well, his skin is making a comeback and patches of new fur are coming in soft and fuzzy. He might have medical needs, but these were about as expensive as his AKC-registered brother, and we love them both just as much."
